

OKLAHOMA CITY MEMORIAL

In Oklahoma City terror struck - there's no defense for madness!
In the aftermath, emotions boiled. There was anger - there was sadness.

The who, the why, the questions, spinning in each head, as the torn and shattered building fell around the many dead.

Crisis is the crucible where character is forged and found,
and the people of Oklahoma stood tall and held their ground.

They put aside their tears and did the work they had to face,
and felt the soothing comfort of a nation's warm embrace.

From all across America, the prayers and people poured,
to help in Oklahoma - to help beat back the sword.

A handful of ignorant and evil men wreaked havoc in OKC, but in the end, grace and goodness triumphed over death's decree!

Today there is a memorial where the Murrah Building stood,
a place to mourn the fallen, to remember all things good.

It's a monument to courage, and to the strength of love, a place where people go to reflect and send prayers to up above!

Oklahoma City Memorial - Photos by Nelda Cable

